Secutor Dayran, a few days since, made a very able speech upon the aghject of our National credit, in which he labored to stem that current, or rather torrent, of public opinion which both at home and abroad stamps us as a nation of cheats and awindlers-which held up to our view the bonds of sorereign States broken and contemped with the bold front of bardened robbers, and refuses us a loan upon the express ground that our promise to pay is deem ed worthless. He succeeded very well, in clearly showing that England is not the nation that should reproach as therefor, for he pointed to periods in her history at which she has been guilty of repudiation more wholesale and awenping that that with which she now charges us—to the stoppage in the reign of charles II to the payment the A.
